Service Board Demands Watchman at Oreland and Annunciator at Roslyn

HEAVY TRAFFIC AT 2 POINTS

The Public Service Commission has ordered the Reading Railway to station watchmen at the Oreland grade crossing, where Miss Elizabeth D. Lockwood, of Chestnut Hill, and Miss Julia B. Lear, of Germantown, were killed recently when their automobile was struck by a Reading train.

The commission has also ordered the railway to install an annunciator at the Roslyn crossing to alert the station man there in detecting arrival of trains.

The commission's order is in the form of an endorsement of the report of John P. Doherty, chief of the accident bureau, which follows:

"I have made an inspection of some of the crossings at grade on the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and as a result make the following recommendations:

"Oreland Crossing—The protection at this crossing is now supplied by an alarm bell and there should be additional protection by the assignment of a watchman. While normally there is a good view of approaching trains, the highway is crossed by a double track and trains moving in opposite directions are likely to create conditions that are made misleading by the ringing of a bell.

"Roslyn Crossing—The assignment to this place of a day and night watchman, this crossing is located on the Northeast Penn branch and although the line is of single track construction, the character and extent of the highway traffic justify protection during the full twenty-four-hour period. The railroad at this point is crossed by the Germantown and Willow Grove turnpike and by the Susquehanna road. On September 29, from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m., the traffic consisted of 350 pedestrians, 615 automobiles, forty-five motorcycles, fifty bicycles and seventy-six teams. From 6 p. m. to 6 a. m. the traffic was 175 pedestrians, 245 automobiles, ten motorcycles, and thirty bicycles and ninety teams. Records of the travel taken in September 30 and on October 1 substantially are in keeping with these figures. In the absence of any other protection, I suggest that an annunciator be provided to notify the watchman of approaching trains."

INCREASE 'L' TRAIN SERVICE

One and Three-quarter Minute Headway, With Short-Run Section

New schedules will be inaugurated by the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company on the elevated subway system on Sunday, November 2. Headway between trains will be cut down and every other train will be turned at Sixty-third street at the western end and at Second street at the eastern end of the system.

Trains at these points will be shifted from one track to another and sent back over the portion of the line between Sixty-third and Second streets, which has the largest traffic. There is also to be an increase in train service. Trains during the nonrush periods will be operated every three minutes instead of every four minutes, as now. During the rush hours headway between trains will be only one and three-quarters instead of two minutes.

TO CONTINUE PHIPPS WORK

State Aid for Dispensary and Social Science Bureau Provided

Phipps Institute will retain its dispensary and bureau of social service. The State Health Department has come to its rescue. It will maintain the two departments, which it considers vital to Philadelphia.

Owing to lack of finances the hospital department of Phipps Institute was closed several years ago. Since then, however, the dispensary has been open daily, and has received high praise from medical scientists for its valuable work in not only aiding victims of tuberculosis in their struggle for life, but also in educating the public in precautionary measures to lessen spread of the disease.

PENN FINANCING HEROES

250 Students Receiving Free Tuition at Cost of $160,000

About 200 students who have returned to the University of Pennsylvania after serving in the army or navy during the war are receiving tuition, which is being paid for out of the University treasury at a cost, it was said today, of $160,000.

This, Provost Edgar Fahs Smith explained, "is one of the many ways in which Pennsylvania is trying to serve the young men of this city, state and nation who served the country."

Of the 10,000 students at the University 1300, chiefly members of the upper classes, saw service abroad. Many of these were seriously in need of financial assistance on their return.

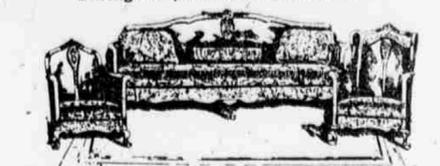

Diphtheria Closes New Jersey School

Nine cases of diphtheria having developed at West Berlin, N. J., at the lower end of Camden county, the Board of Health has closed the schools in the district to prevent a possible spread of the disease.
